How long can facial cleanser be stored in the storage cabinet

Overview

Yes, your face cleanser can expire. It can last up to one or two years before it finally expires. How should I store my skincare products?

Always store your skincare products in a cool, dry place out of direct sunlight. Write the date that you open the product on the packaging to help you remember how long to use it for. Check the packaging for any signs of mould, as this might mean that the product has expired. Avoid sharing skincare products with others.

Do face cleansers expire?

Like other skincare products, face cleansers have an expiration date. Abigail James, an international facialist and Liz Earle Global Treatments ambassador, explains to Women's Health that the prime age of face cleaners is only up to six to eight months after opening.

How long does a cleanser last?

The actives found in your cleanser have a shelf life of six to eight months, after this, they lose their potency. So while your cleanser might look the same, if it has been part of your routine for longer than six to eight months, it's essentially not doing anything that it is supposed to do.

How long does a face cleanser last?

Abigail James, an international facialist and Liz Earle Global Treatments ambassador, explains to Women's Health that the prime age of face cleaners is only up to six to eight months after opening. Depending on the type of cleanser that you have, the ingredients in the cleanser may last sooner or longer than this timeframe.

How long does unopened skin care last?

An unopened product that's still sealed may have a shelf life of at least three to five years. However, this timeframe will likely be shortened if the item is stored in a sunny, hot, or humid environment. Keep your skin care in a cool, dry place—ideally not in the bathroom.

How do I prolong the shelf life of my products?

Use these guidelines for prolonging the shelf life of your products. DO store products in a cabinet or drawer. DO wash your hands before using products. DO tighten/secure the cap after each use. DO consider how climate and humidity will shorten a product's shelf life. DO toss out eye products after you've had an eye infection.
